

ASTOR MARKET NOW COMPLETED

Building at Broadway and 95th Street Will Open on Saturday Next.

COUNTERS OF GLASS AND TILE FLOORS

Structure Equipped with Two 20-Ton Ice Machines and Freezing Rooms.

Vincent Astor, whose new market at Broadway and 95th st. will open next Saturday, has given New Yorkers something entirely novel in his new building. As a member of Mayor Mitchel's commission on markets he became much interested in the subject, and his thoughts have crystallized in the strictly utilitarian structure now completed.

Mr. Astor instructed his architects, Tracy & Swartout, to first design a market which should embody every convenience which experience had shown necessary in a market building, and then to make a structure which would be an artistic addition to Broadway.

The first impression upon entering the building is that of light and cleanliness. The interior is filled with glass counters and huge white enameled ice boxes carry out this idea. There are no concealed spaces, no mouldings to catch dirt. All meat and poultry is in plate glass cases, cooled by coils gleaming with frost. All of the refrigerators are cooled by the
